

'What3Words' Wants To Replace Postcodes With Words - For The Entire Globe

This Website Just Killed The Postcode

Michael Rundle — Huffington Post UK

02/07/2013 05:29am BST | Updated August 31, 2013

A new mapping site is aiming to replace postcodes, addresses and complicated directions with something far more simple: words.

Just three words, in fact.

What3Words is a new service which has divided the world up into 57 trillion 3m x 3m squares, and given each one a unique, three-word name.

TRENDING

From Cynthia Erivo To Daddy Pig: All London Marathon's 2026 Celeb Finish Times

BBC Apologises After Uncensored N-Word Airs Twice In A Day On Radio 1

BBC Expert Delivers Grim Assessment Of Iran Peace Deal Hopes: 'It Will Take A Long Time'

'Have You Tried Head & Shoulders?': My GP Prescribed Me Shampoo For 10 Weeks Before Diagnosing My Leukaemia

Experts Reveal Most Effective Exercise To Lower Blood Pressure

Critics Aren't Exactly Won Over By Graham Norton's 'Derivative' New Reality Show

By searching on a map - either on the web or mobile devices (iOS and Android) - you can find out the name of each place, and easily send it to a friend.

Oxford Circus? "major.places.fruit".

Buckingham Palace? "frock.near.silly"

Middle of the English Channel? "endures.differing.relics"

The new site is both extremely simple and very precise, and far more easy to remember than a postcode. Its makers give the example of finding a tent at Glastonbury - with the new site each tent could be individually located, making sending directions far easier.

"Telling people 3 simple words is much easier than giving a full address and explanation of how to find a precise location," says what3words CEO Chris Sheldrick. "It's also much more memorable."

For 99p users can also buy a "OneWord" - a shortened, even more simple address preceded by an asterisk.

What3Words is a London-based company founded by Chris Sheldrick, Jack Waley-Cohen and Michael Dent.

Take a look at the What3Words website.

RELATED

- WHAT3WORDS
- MAPPING
- TECH CITY
- MAPS
- UK NEWS

Suggest a correction | Submit a tip

WHAT'S HOT

Trump Says He's 'Honoured' By Assassination Attempts Against Him After Latest Shooting

What We Know About The Suspect In The White House Correspondents' Dinner Shooting

The Most Common Issues Gen Xers Bring Up In Therapy